Enrollment in Undergraduate and Graduate Courses During the Same Term:

Some students mix undergraduate and graduate courses together in one term. It is important to understand that only the courses in your current degree program will count towards federal aid eligibility - including federal loans.

EXAMPLE: An undergraduate student enrolls for 9 credit hours of undergraduate courses and 3 credit hours of a graduate course in one term. This student is eligible for federal aid. However, this student may be surprised that they are not eligible as a full-time student. Only the 9 undergraduate credit hours apply to their current degree program. In this case, they will also not be eligible for Liberty institutional aid.

Exception: If a graduate student is required to take an undergraduate level prerequisite course in order to complete a graduate course, the prerequisite course will count in determining aid eligibility.

Availability of General Equivalency Diploma (GED) Classes and Testing

Students looking to obtain a GED should review testing sites and availability at this link.

Sanctions

Factors which could lead to a recalculation of financial aid and ultimately lead to a change, reduction, or elimination of federal, state, institutional and/or any other types of financial aid eligibility:

- Not attending, dropping, or withdrawing from courses and/or sub-terms you are registered to attend
- Completely withdrawing from the University
- Failing to properly withdraw from the University
- Enrolling in courses that do not apply to your degree completion plan
- Failing to maintain Financial Aid satisfactory academic progress
- Providing incomplete or inaccurate information during the application process
- Receiving additional sources of aid (such as outside grants or private loans)
- Receiving aid above the amount of tuition (which may lower Liberty University scholarships)
- Changing enrollment level (some scholarships require full-time enrollment; Federal Direct Student and PLUS loans require half-time enrollment)
- Changing grade level or academic programs (For example, some majors are not eligible for the Virginia Tuition Assistance Grant)
- Changing between Resident and Liberty University Online student status, and vice versa
- Defaulting on a student loan or having an unresolved federal grant overpayment
- Providing false or misleading information
- Receiving federal aid for the same academic year at another institution
- Repeating a course for which you already received a passing grade more than once
- Awards that cover the majority of direct costs (i.e. DGIA, Continuing Education, Private School Affiliation Scholarships, etc.) do not allow for stacking with other Liberty University aid sources such as the Liberty Champion Award or Liberty Book Dollars.

Continuing Education Policy?

Continuing Education may be combined with federal, state and other institutional aid.? This combination may not exceed the student?s total charges for tuition and fees.?

Liberty University Continuing Education and Dependent Grant in Aid educational benefits are not eligible for use for the following programs: Doctor of Osteopathy, School of Law, degree programs offered by the School of Law or JURi courses, A.A. or B.S. in Paralegal Studies, M.B.A.: American Legal Studies, M.B.A.: International Legal Studies, and undergraduate or graduate certificate programs.

Policy Rationale

This policy is in place to ensure proper awarding and distribution of federal, state, and institutional aid.

Definition of Glossary Terms

Title IV: The portion of the Higher Education Act (see HEA) that includes most of the federal financial aid programs.

Financial Aid Satisfactory Academic Progress:

Students must meet Financial Aid Satisfactory Academic Progress (SAP) requirements to receive federal Title IV aid that includes the Federal Pell Grant, Federal Supplemental Education Opportunity Grant (FSEOG), Federal Work Study, Federal TEACH Grant, and Federal Direct Education Loans (Stafford, Parent PLUS, and Grad PLUS). Liberty University also applies the SAP requirements to monitor eligibility for all institutional aid. The Virginia Commonwealth programs are administered under the guidelines from the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia (SCHEV).

Half-time: A student who is carrying an academic workload that is considered at least one-half the workload of a full-time student (as determined by the school).
